Chicago, June 17.—The Republican party, in national convention assembled, has gone on record for an Army of its present strength and the rounding out in all its units of the Navy as limited by the naval treaties. Through the spokesman of President Hoover, Senator Dickinson, of Iowa, the temporary chairman, these were proclaimed as the policies of the Chief Executive, and the platform adopted contained them as the continued purpose of the party. "Our platforms have become the laws of the United States," Mr. Dickinson declared. Let us hope this assurance will apply in the matter of the dicta relative to National Defense.

Here are some of the assertions of the President's keynoter:

"International conferences, which had their origin with Republican Presidents, have put an end to the race for supremacy upon the seas."

During the last twelve years of continuous Republican control, "we have taken the lead in reducing our standing army to an aggregate strength of 137,000 officers and men, including the Philippine Scouts."

"At the same time, Republican administrations have insisted upon adequate forces for the National Defense, for to be unprepared is simply to invite attack."

"Our fleet is at a high state of efficiency and is being rounded out in all its units under the limitations imposed by the Naval Arms Treaties."

"Our Army has been reduced to the smallest size consistent with safety, but it forms the backbone of a national defense which speedily can be recruited to a strength sufficient to guard our shores from foreign invasion."

Here is another keynote declaration of importance:

"In the event this nation should ever again be compelled to defend itself by force of arms, every dollar and material thing shall bear its just proportion of the burdens of war. * * * His (the President's) determination has resulted in the development of practical programs that assure the elimination or minimizing of profiteering, injustice, favoritism, and inefficiency in the event of any future war."

The Republican President thus is pledged to the maintenance of the Army at its present strength, a Navy equipped in all its units as permitted by the Washington and London Treaties, and the enactment of laws which will assure the equal and profitless use of all power, man and material, in protecting the nation from foreign attack.

So much for the obligations of the President in power. Now let us examine the pledges formally made by the party and accepted by its candidate. It must not be forgotten that these pledges were formulated after the Resolutions Committee had heard the arguments of pacifists, under the leadership of the vener-

Economy Bill Delays
Decision on Army Cut

While the Army appropriation bill, with its 2,000 officer cut eliminated by the Senate, lies on the Speaker's table in the House, friends of National Defense are biding their time until the lower chamber appoints conferees to make a final settlement of the differences between the two bodies.

While no official explanation of the House's delay is forthcoming, it is generally understood that Representative Ross A. Collins, author of the drastic cuts made by that body, is withholding appointment of the conferees by not making any recommendations until after the Omnibus Economy bill is passed. His motive in this, it is said, is to hold out in the Army conference for whatever provisions affecting the service that may fall in the Economy conference. For example, he may attempt to reduce the item "Pay of the Army" in accordance with whatever pay cuts may materialize and he probably will attempt to restrict further retired pay if the provisions in the Economy bill do not satisfy him.

Senator Reed told the Journal yesterday that he was ready to go ahead with the Army supply bill, but that he could do nothing until the House named conferees. Asked whether the delay was occasioned by a desire to wait until there was final settlement of the Economy bill, as has been stated, the Senator declared that he had "no idea what was delaying things."

He declined to predict what will be the final outcome of the move of the proposal to cut 2,000 officers from the active list of the Army.

"Mr. Collins has already done enough of that for both of us," he added.

Questioned as whether he would hold out to the end against any cut in officer strength, Senator Reed replied that "of course he would."

"Making threats before you enter a conference is never a very good attitude to take," he added. "However, you know my views and can guess what I will do."

Both Representative Joseph Byrns, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, and Representative Ross Collins, in charge of the bill in the House, refused to talk about what they would do in the conference.

"I can't very well tell you what my opinion is in the matter," declared the former. "It would sound like I was trying to dictate to the House conferees."

"I don't know what I'm going to do," answered the Mississippian. "You ought to know that I never quit a fight, however."

The major difference between the two houses to be settled in conference is, of course, the 2,000 officer cut voted by a narrow margin in the House and rejected overwhelmingly by the Senate.

Then, too, the Senate rejected provisions put in by the House such as the prohibition against military aides for civil officers outside of the War Department except the President (apparently this affects only Secretary Stimson's aide, Capt. Eugene A. Regnier); limiting military attaches to 50; cutting the num-

Suggest "Police" Needs
As Basis For Arms Cut

With little prospect in sight for concrete results within the near future, the Disarmament Conference at Geneva on June 14 voted to stop public sessions until the end of next week. While a large number of the delegates have gone to Lausanne, a number including Ambassador Hugh Gibson will remain in Geneva.

Considerable discussion has been aroused over an informal proposal suggested by Mr. Gibson. This proposal, said to have originated with President Hoover before the opening of the present conference, suggests the limiting of effectiveness by a coefficient based on domestic police needs. It is explained that under it each nation would determine the size land force it would need for purely domestic police use. Effectives above this figure would be surplus and form a basis for mutual reduction.

It was said at the State Department that the plan has not been formally presented and that no copies of it have been transmitted to the Department.

In the discussions that have been going on in the various commissions for land, navy, air and chemical and bacteriological weapons great stress has been placed on efforts to determine what does and what does not constitute offensive or aggressive weapons.

Considerable attention has been given by the land commission to the proposals made some time ago by Mr. Hugh Gibson looking toward the elimination of tanks and big guns as "offensive" weapons.

Tanks and Armored Cars

In the meetings of the Land Commission efforts have been made to set a definition of tanks and of armored cars. The official Journal of the conference reveals that on June 1 Lord Stanhope, representing the United Kingdom, put forth the following definition, which was immediately supported by Ambassador Hugh R. Wilson, of the American Delegation:

"Generally speaking, a tank can be considered as armored and armed when it is self-propelled and equipped to cross rough ground by means of caterpillars and reduce the obstacles encountered on the battlefield. Armored cars are armored vehicles on wheels. They are designed to be used on roads, but may be equipped with wheels enabling them to move across country. Their principal features are: great range of action and speed on roads, but they have practically no capacity for crossing trenches. Like tanks, their function is reconnoitering and they are useless in an attack on organized defensive divisions."

In connection with this distinction between tanks and armored cars, it is interesting to note that Secretary Hurley when asking the Senate Appropriations Committee to remove the restriction in the Army bill that $200,000 must be spent for the purchase of convertible armored tanks pointed out that "The disarmament conference at Geneva is seriously considering prohibiting the employment of tanks. It is, therefore, desired to have authority to substitute, if

Senate Reduces House's
Navy Bill By $7,419,998

After removing most of the restrictive provisions inserted by the House, the Senate on Thursday passed the 1933 Navy Department appropriation bill. The measure provides $318,933,461, which is $39,328,662 under the current year's funds, $22,743,989 below the budget estimates, and $7,419,998 less than the amount provided by the House.

The cut in the enlisted strength of the Marine Corps contemplated under the curtailed provisions of the bill as it passed the House, was removed when the Senate restored the funds. A ban on the appointment of officers in the Marine Corps was also stricken out.

Two threatened blows at naval aviation were fended off by the Senate in restoring funds for new airplanes and for flight pay. A $715,000 appropriation for new planes eliminated by the House was reinserted on the floor of the Senate, and all but $94,000 of the cut in flight pay was restored. According to estimates of the Navy Department, the flying pay slash approved by the House would have meant "grounding" about one hundred naval aviators. As approved by the Senate, only about 25 or 30 non-flyers, aerologists and flight surgeons will have to be taken off aviation duty, the Bureau of Aeronautics states.

An appropriation of one million dollars from the naval hospital fund, to start construction on the Philadelphia Hospital was approved, following an eloquent speech by Senator David Reed.

After voting down an amendment providing $125,000 to send Marines to Nicaragua next fall to supervise the elections, the Senate, led by Democratic Leader Robinson, adopted another amendment prohibiting the sending of additional Marines to Nicaragua, in order to assure that other funds were not used for the purpose. Although occasioning a great deal of debate, the provisions were adopted without a record vote.

Additional funds were approved for the naval training station at Newport, R. I., which although falling far short of the amount originally provided in the Budget, will enable the Navy to keep the station open, it is hoped. An appropriation of $650,000 for holding the naval reserve summer cruises was approved by the Senate by a vote of 34 to 26, after Senator Bankhead, Dem., of Ala., made an attempt to strike out the item.

Led by Senator LaFollette, of Wisconsin, opponents of the measure waged an unsuccessful fight to have the bill re-committed to the appropriations committee for a flat ten per cent cut. The Progressive leader delivered a fiery speech against "the excessive cost of the Navy," but was defeated, 27 to 22, upon a roll-call. The vote was as follows:

For the ten per cent cut—Bankhead, Blaine, Brookhart, Capper, Carey, Connally, Costigan, Frazier, Hawes, Howell, King, LaFollette, McGill, Norbeck, Norris, Sheppard, Shipstead, Thomas of Idaho, Thomas of Oklahoma, Vandenberg, Walsh of Massachusetts, Wheeler. Against the ten per cent cut—Austin, Barbour, Broussard, Bulkeley, Byrnes,

Press Continues Demand That Congress Maintain Army Officer Strength

With final decision as to the two thousand Army officer reduction not yet made, public opinion continues to express itself through the press in opposition to the cut. The Senate is praised for going on record so overwhelmingly for the retention of the officers, and the House is called upon to repudiate its previous vote.

"This reduction," states the New York American, "was voted by the House at the instigation of its most fanatical pacifist-Congressman Collins of Mississippi, chairman of the sub-committee which organized this sapping expedition against the national defense."

"It was voted under the twofold and utterly false pretense that the military situation throughout the world justifies, and the economic emergency in this country demands, the nullification of the National Defense Act of 1920 and the crippling of our land forces which the adoption of this fatuous proposal would involve. . . ."

"In short, the Collins bill proposes to scrap all the investment which has been made in the education and training of these officers, and furthermore to load up the treasury with a fixed charge of $108,000,000; and finally, and worst of all, dangerously to weaken our national defense in order that some pin-headed pacifist Congressmen may lie to their constituents about alleged savings they have not made."

"Such a preposterous legislative proposal is not economy. It is folly and traitorous folly at that."

"The saving to be effected is small, the harm which will be done to the army very great," comments the Plainsfield, N. J., Courier News.

"The investment of the United States Government in these officers has been figured as $60,000,000. If they are cut off from the service this will be sacrificed."

"Our whole theory of national defense is based upon the conception of a small, highly trained, professional army which will serve as a first line behind which the great masses necessary for modern warfare can be assembled and trained. Hence the mission of the regular forces is dual. They must be ready to take the first shock of action and at the same time furnish leaders for the new forces summoned from civilian life."

"If this pacifist measure becomes a law in the form that the House sent it to the Senate, Congress will thereby nullify the National Defense Act of 1920 and cripple what is left of our military establishment," declares the Washington Herald.

"This proposed reduction in the commissioned strength of the army is not limited to the present emergency."

"It is intended to be permanent. It was put into the House bill by Congressman

Collins of Mississippi, a fanatical pacifist.

"There is no economy in this proposal. It is extravagance of the most reckless sort."

"Only fat-headed and misguided economy would weaken the American Army and Navy at this time and under existing world conditions," the Seattle Times states. "If the United States possessed a land force like that of France, Russia or some other of the European nations, reduction would be in order. Our Army has shrunk to the point where it constitutes only the trained nucleus of such a force as would be necessary in the event of war. To lose any considerable part of the commissioned personnel now would be to subject the republic to danger, in case of an emergency, so grave that it overbalances even the present necessity for rigid economy in national affairs."

Quoting from an address by former Senator Reed of Missouri warning against the weakening of national defense and putting dependence in "paper barricades," the Shreveport, La., Times adds,

"That is a timely message for a Congress which has flirted dangerously with disarmament at a time when every other major power in position to do so has enlarged its mass of warring implements, and at a time when a great world conference to bring about disarmament is proving merely another futile gesture."

"The army should have at least 14,000 officers to do the work that should be done and this number would still be much smaller than that of foreign countries," comments the Columbus, Ga., Enquirer Sun. "The pacifists would do away with the army and navy, but they are tempting danger. Among them are many communists who have a special design in crippling national defense."

"The officers are 'the brains of the army.' Unless we have a sufficient number of them, national defense will reach a point so low as to place the country in a dangerous situation."

"While the nation would be deprived of the services of these officers, whose education was costly to the government and who would be virtually indispensable in the event of the outbreak of any hostilities involving the United States," argues the Toledo Blade, "the actual saving of money would be comparatively small, for in retirement, these officers still would draw two-thirds of their regular salaries."

"No doubt the nation would get more for its money if all such matters were left to the discretion of the secretaries of the army and the navy."

desirable, light armored cars for use by mechanized cavalry."

Lord Stanhope's definition met with rather general approval. M. Aubert, of France, however, said he would accept the distinction between tanks and armored cars, if it were intended to lead to a difference of treatment. He did not, however, think it possible to establish a clear distinction between them. The only difference, he said, is one of use, adding that if one weapon were suppressed the other would assume greater value. Therefore, unless a conventional definition and an entirely restrictive one were adopted for an armored car, e.g., that it must not leave the road, the French delegation thought it useless to continue the discussion, which it considered was unlikely to lead to the desired conclusion.

Lord Stanhope previously had expressed a belief that the heavier the tank the more offensive it was. The British delegation, he said, considered that only heavy tanks could cross intact trenches without artillery preparation in such a way as to deliver an unforeseen blow at the enemy. His delegation further was of the opinion that no type of tanks constituted, properly speaking, a menace for the civil population. Lord Stanhope was of the opinion that armies should be authorized to keep tanks of less than 20 tons to enable them to effect economies in men and money in policing their territories, particularly in the colonies. Tanks of a higher tonnage, he held, should be prohibited.

Naval Commission

The Naval Commission has run into a number of snags and referred them to sub-committees for further discussion and recommendations. The question of exempt vessels and the number and calibre of guns they should be permitted to carry was sent to a sub-committee of which the United States is a member on June 3. The commission also submitted to the sub-committee a proposal of the Italian delegate that the speed of exempt vessels be reduced from 20 to 18 knots.

During the discussion which resulted in the Naval Commission, with Germany abstaining, unanimously adopting an age-limit of 26 years for capital ships, the President summarized the views of the various delegates on this question as follows: United Kingdom and Soviet Russia, 26 years; France and Italy, 25 years;

Germany, 20 years; United States, "a figure above 20 years"; Japan, 26 years for vessels over 20,000 tons and 20 for vessels below 20,000 tons; China, Netherlands, Argentina and Sweden, "greatest possible extension of age-limit."

With the exception of the German delegation, which abstained from voting, and the Soviet delegation, which advocated the abolition of aircraft carriers, the Naval Commission was unanimous in agreeing on 20 years as an age-limit for aircraft carriers "subject to any ulterior decision by the General Commission."

Air Commission

The Air Commission also found itself involved in controversial details and agreed to submit them to sub-committees for study and report.

Mr. Allen W. Dulles, of the American Delegation, previously had reminded the commission of the conclusion of the report of another sub-committee, in which the view had been expressed that, in order to distinguish aircraft which were the most offensive from the point of view of their effectiveness against national defense or as constituting a threat to civil populations, it was necessary to take into account the useful load and capability of arriving at an objective. In summarizing Mr. Dulles' remarks, the official Journal states:

"In the case of bombing aeroplanes particular consideration has been paid to size and a rider had been added to the effect that all aircraft might be adapted with a view to bombing operations. It should be remembered that two bombing aeroplanes transporting a fixed quantity of bombs might be more offensive than a single aeroplane transporting a quantity which was proportionately greater. In order to get a general view of the problem in its full extent it would be necessary to consider quantitative limitation."

"Moreover, geographical conditions must be taken into consideration in a general study of the problem of aviation, since the question must be approached differently in the case of Europe where the distances to be traversed were more limited than in the case of America, where distances were much greater."

"The delegation of the United States hesitated for the moment to give figures, not because it was not in favour of distinguishing between aeroplanes, but simply because it did not think that the problem was susceptible of a mathematical solution."

"He would recommend that a report should be submitted to the General Commission, reference being made to the figures already furnished by delegations and a special paragraph possibly being added regarding the unanimous conclusions of the Commission concerning the serious threat which bombing aeroplanes represented for the civil population. The General Commission would then be in a position to come to a decision as to the steps to be taken in order to limit the threat to civilian populations either by a control of bombing operations, or by a reduction of aircraft intended for such operations, or by any other measure which might be deemed effective."

Shannon Investigation

Protests against the activities of Army and Navy post exchanges and government stores have been received from merchants near practically every post or station in the country, Representative Shannon, Dem., of Missouri, stated yesterday.

Representative Shannon, who heads the special committee appointed by the House of Representatives to "investigate the Government in business," said that the group would probably visit a number of Army and Navy stations this summer to personally determine conditions. The committee is to report back to the House next December, presenting if so decided, any legislation deemed necessary.

"We shall personally investigate some of the posts," said the Missourian, "but I expect that we will be unable to buy even a parcel of pins now. However, three weeks ago, before our committee was appointed, we could have gone into a number of post exchanges and have purchased a piano. Why, they are regular department stores, and they have been open to anyone, in many cases."

During the past week the Shannon committee has been meeting daily. Before hearings are concluded, Mr. Shannon says, he will ask that the War and Navy Departments send representatives to present their side of the case.

"All this investigation would have been unnecessary, however," he declared, "if the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy had stopped these abuses when their attention was first called to the matter."

Examination of Reserve Officers

In response to a request received by the Adjutant General for information for use in preparing and conducting examinations, for certificates of capacity, of Reserve officers assigned to the Arm and Service Assignment Group, procedure as outlined below has been recommended by the Chiefs of Arms and Services concerned and approved by the War Department:

Air Corps Reserve

Questions should be prepared as outlined in AR 140-23.

Chemical Warfare Service Reserve

Questions to be prepared by the Chemical Warfare Service officer at Corps Area Headquarters or, for officers assigned to procurement duties, by the Executive Officer of the interested Chemical Warfare Service Procurement District. If considered desirable by the Corps Area Commander, request may be made upon The Adjutant General for preparation in the office of the Chief of the Chemical Warfare Service of questions in certain subjects.

Corps of Engineers Reserve

For Reserve officers assigned to procurement duties, the Regular Army Executive officer of the procurement district concerned should prepare the questions. For Reserve officers not assigned to procurement duties, questions in military subjects covered by Army Extension Courses should be prepared by an examiner or other designated representative of the Corps Area Commander. For examinations in Commercial Law; Contracts; Industrial Mobilization; Supply Division, Office of the Chief of Engineers and Methods of Procurement Planning, request should be made upon The Adjutant General for preparation of questions in the office of the Chief of Engineers.

Medical Department Reserve

Questions should be prepared as outlined in AR 140-33.

Ordnance Department Reserve

The services of Corps Area Ordnance Officers, or of officers of the Ordnance Department stationed at Procurement Districts or at Arsenals to which Reserve officers are assigned, should, normally, be utilized, in the preparation of questions. Cases in which the above procedure is not deemed advisable should be referred to The Adjutant General for preparation

Marine Corps Promotion List

The claim of the 137 officers who were displaced from their position on the promotion list in 1921, is "based on technical legal points," Brig. Gen. Rufus Lane, the Adjutant and Inspector of the Marine Corps, stated this week in explaining why the Marine Corps has repeatedly turned down requests that the Attorney General pass upon the decision of the Navy Department in the matter.

Members of the group of officers appointed in the Marine Corps during the World War and, although then given regular permanent appointments, were displaced from the promotion list in 1921 when a large number of temporary officers were taken in, contend that their vested rights were taken from them under an erroneous decision of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, and that the whole action was illegal.

Despite the fact that a large number of officers have formally requested that an opinion be requested of the Attorney General as to whether the action was legal or illegal, Marine Corps Headquarters has in each case disapproved the request.

General Lane, when asked this week why Marine Corps Headquarters refused the requests, said that it was because "it was felt that the decision was correct."

"There is no equity in the claim," he declared. "It is based entirely on technical legal grounds. What they are kicking about is that they were not given a monopoly of the vacancies. They had their chance with the others."

"Besides," he continued, "nothing could be done now by securing an opinion from the Attorney General. They are all confirmed and the thing is settled. It would take legislation to change the list now."

Officers who were deprived of their rights by the decision regard this as an exact statement of the whole case, i. e., that the Marine Corps refused to carry out the laws enacted by Congress, but in defiance of law, carried through the revision of the promotion list in accordance with their own ideas of what the law should be.

They contend that Congress is the body to decide what the "equities" of the situation are, and that the Marine Corps should have followed the legally enacted precepts of Congress and not the ideas of its ranking officers at the time, which differed from the law. They hope to secure an opinion from the Attorney General through Congressional help, and then if their case is established, it can be decided whether Congress must pass another act to carry out what was intended ten years ago.

A board of officers of the Corps of Engineers, to consist of: Col. George M. Hoffman, Col. Edward M. Markham, Col. Gustave R. Lukesh, and Maj. ber of bands to 83; restricting the total of retired pay and other government pay to $3,000; prohibition against installing electric ranges where gas is available; prohibition against public transportation of private automobiles; provision against further enrollments in the Air, Medical, Dental or Veterinary ROTC units; and the provision against government manufacture of wearing apparel for the Army.

Also to be decided are amendments put in by the Senate which were not inserted by the House, such as the limitation of Post Exchange activities to "real assistance and convenience to enlisted men and troops in supplying them with articles of ordinary use, wear, and consumption not furnished by the Government"; provision that "hereafter Arlington National Cemetery shall be administered by an officer of the Army retired from active service under the provisions of section 1251, Revised Statutes, detailed on active duty for that purpose"; fixing rental and subsistence allowances for 1933 the same as for the current year, subject to reductions which might be levied by the Economy bill (which from present indications will not affect allowances); and the provision permitting 15 per cent interchangeability between items.

In addition under the restriction against the use of official cars for the transportation of officers and employees between their homes and places of work the Senate struck out the following exception put in by the House: "This section shall not apply to any motor vehicle for official use of the Secretary of War, and no other persons connected with the War Department or the Military Establishment, except medical officers on outpatient medical service, shall have a government-owned motor vehicle for their exclusive use." In its place the Senate substituted: "This section shall not apply to medical officers on outpatient medical service, to whom may be assigned a government-owned motor vehicle for their exclusive use."

Also the Senate struck out the provision that $200,000 shall be available "exclusively for the purchase of five convertible armored tanks" and substituted therefor "for the procurement of tank or combat cars."

When the bill was on the floor of the Senate, before that body voted to retain the 2,000 officers and send the measure to conference, there was a two-man debate between Senator Frazier, proponent of the cut, and Senator Reed, National Defense advocate.

"Of course," Senator Frazier said, "it would be no great hardship to those officers to be put on the retired list. I do not know how much they are doing in civilian work, the 7,000 or more, for the benefit of the country, and whether they are all earning their money or not. I am frank to say I am doubtful whether they are all earning their money. As to some of those who are spreading propaganda, such as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] read from an official booklet put out by the War Department would seem to indicate that it is doubtful whether or not the men of that type are earning their money, whether they are carrying out the policy that should be carried out by the majority of the people of our country."

"When they advocate militarism and preach against any progressive idea that they believe is against militarism, it is doubtful in my mind whether they are a benefit to the country and whether at least 2,000 of them should not be retired from the active service."

"The amendment putting back those 2,000 Army officers would increase the appropriation of $27,709,297 as passed by the House to $31,833,427, or an increase of $4,523,500. It is true, as the Senator from Pennsylvania explained, that in the other amendment in line 11, pay of officers on the retired list, it is cut down by $3,467,625, but the saving would be, under those two or three amendments, $1,055,875. Even that amount of money is worth while in these hard times, when we are attempting to balance the Budget. We have argued and debated for days on items involving less than that amount of saving.

"Mr. President, it seems to me this amendment should not be agreed to, but that the 2,000 Army officers who were put on the retired list by the vote of the House of Representatives should not be put back on the active list by the vote of the Senate. Only a little over 5,000 of them—to be exact, according to the Senator from Florida, 5,031—are in the Army service proper, and over 7,000 of them are in some other service. I would like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he has the figures?"

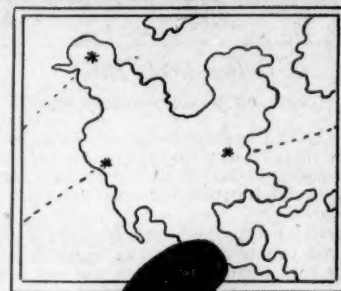

Senator Reed: "Mr. President, I have the figures showing the distribution of officers in the different branches of the Army, and I would be glad to put them in the Record, but the figures do not show exactly how many were on duty with the troops. The Senator must understand that the figures for those on duty with troops of the 5,000 officers included only those with regular troops."

"In addition to that there is a very large number of regular officers on duty with troops of the National Guard, another large number serving with the headquarters of the reserve division, and, as was said by the Senator from Florida, there is a very considerable number in training all the time in the various schools like the Artillery School at Fort Sill, the Infantry School at Benning, and the Tank School at Camp Meade. There are several hundred officers all the time on duty at the War College. It is the only way to keep the officer up to the utmost professional fitness. I can assure the Senator that we have not any more than we need. We ought to have 14,000."

Senator Frazier: "Mr. President, the Secretary of the Reserve Officers' Association here in Washington gives the figures for the National Guard and other similar organizations as 1,653. That number deducted from 7,069 leaves 5,416 Army officers."

Senator Reed: "But remember that over a thousand of these are doctors. I can get the breakdown from the War Department if the Senator thinks it would be helpful. When we take out the doctors and veterinarians and the dentists, the number comes down very fast. Many of the doctors are at Walter Reed Hospital. They are not loafing. I can assure the Senator they are all working."

Senator Frazier: "Mr. President, it may be true the Army officers are gainfully employed. I hope they are. Many of them are so-called Army engineers, but I notice a provision in the bill on page 36 that the Secretary of War, if he deems it necessary, may hire expert engineers at rates of pay to be fixed by him not to exceed $50 per day and not exceeding 50 days each and necessary traveling expenses. I take it those are civilian engineers. I think probably the Army engineers do need some expert advice once in a while, and have to go to civilian engineers to get it. From my experience with Army engineers in the river and harbor work and flood-control work, I would judge that they have made a dismal failure of it and are still hanging on to these jobs and do not want to be retired because it would cut down their pay a little. Delay Army Bill is why the fight is being put up to put back in the bill the appropriation for the 2,000 additional Army officers over and above the number provided by the House."

Senator Reed: "The question involved comes down to this—whether it is a real economy to give up the full-time service of 2,000 officers upon whose training we have spent a very large amount of Government money, whether it is wise to throw away the services of those men in order to save something less than one-quarter of their pay, because the House bill provides not that we shall save the salaries of these officers who are dropped from the Army, but that we shall retire them on three-quarters pay, and, consequently, we would be paying hereafter 75 per cent of what we are paying now, and getting nothing whatever in return for it."

"That is the proposition in a nutshell. Not only is it as bad as that but it is worse, because of the 3,300,000 which we would save in their pay we would immediately lose $900,000 because of the extra travel required to bring them back to their homes and to send officers to replace them in their present stations, which would be necessary to a large extent. So that from the standpoint of economy it seemed to us that there was nothing whatsoever gained."

"Furthermore, a large number of those who would be thus retired are very young men; and they would be on the retired list for the rest of their lives, and we would have to count on paying them three-quarters of their pay for many years more than the average expectancy of an officer on the retired list at present."

"Not only is that true but we would have no one at all to use in training the National Guard, in training the reserve components, in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and in the citizens' military training camps. All of those activities would cease to have the benefit of the training of regular officers; and they would be driven back upon the more dubious training that they might receive from the reserve officers, who themselves would not be under the supervision of regulars."

"According to the forces that we now have in the Regular Army of the United States, it is estimated by the General Staff that 14,000 officers are needed properly to exercise the functions of that body of troops. We have only 12,000. We have made drastic cuts since the World War. After our war-time Army was disbanded in 1919, when we had got down to what we thought was a peace-time footing, we had nearly 20,000 officers. Then in 1922 Congress compelled a cut from 20,000 down to 12,000, and, in order to make that cut, put in the system which all of us remember who were here at that time, the Class B proceedings."

"The corridors of the Capitol and of the Senate Office Building were filled with grief-stricken men and weeping women for months, trying to get relief from that enforced retirement from the Army. Men who had given up all prospect of success in civil life, and had made the Army their career, were thrown out then ruthlessly. Now, the House of Representatives and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. Frazier) propose to do it again."

"I saw a list of the officers of the Army according to efficiency. I am sorry that I have not the figures before me; but it shows that out of the 12,000 officers now in the Army, all but 28, as I recall the figures, were classed satisfactory, excellent or superior. Only 28 were classed unsatisfactory or inferior. That was as of the end of the last fiscal year; and it is safe to say that by the regular processes of attrition all of those 28 have now been dropped. So that the proposal now made of cutting an additional 2,000 officers means that we are to take officers who are graded by their superiors with the utmost care as being wholly satisfactory or excellent or superior. It does not mean that we are getting rid of the unit. They have been weeded out already. It is safe to say that practically every man in the 12,000 today is efficient professionally, is fitted for the position that he occupies, the career that he has taken unto himself, and has fitted himself for its able performance."

"And how does the House propose to do it? By creating a body of five generals who, between now and the 30th of next September, are to pass on these 2,000 cases, and drop the 2,000 least efficient. Could any five human beings between June 9 and September 30 pass judgment not only upon the 2,000 who are to be dropped but upon all the others—because naturally all the 12,000 have to be passed upon in order to pick out the 2,000 least efficient. It is a human impossibility to do it. They would have to pass on more than 100 officers in a day in order to accomplish that result."

Later Senator Reed explained:

"I have from the staff a rough statement of the present duties of the 12,000 officers of the Regular Army, and that distribution is as follows:

"With troops of the Regular Army, including overhead at camps and posts, 7,000."

"At arsenals and depots, 500."

"At general hospital, 300."

"At the service schools, including the War College, 1,500."

"With civilian components: that is to say, the National Guard, the Reserve Officers' Training Camps and the reserve, 1,600."

"General overhead, including on duty in the War Department here, corps area headquarters, and so on; on river and harbor work, on flood-control work, and so on, 1,100."

"Total, 12,000."

"Mr. President, there is one other matter which ought to be borne in mind in considering this proposed reduction in the number of officers, and that is the investment we already have in the 2,000 officers. About 35 per cent of the 2,000 in all likelihood will be West Pointers. We have spent on each one of them during the four years he was at West Point over $9,000, and there, it will be seen, we would suffer a loss of investment of $6,000,000, which we would have put into the education of those officers, in order to save about $3,000,000 on their pay."

Representative Collins, author of the drastic cuts applied by the House, under leave to extend his remarks, reprinted in the Congressional Record portions of his speech while the bill was under consideration in the House and portions of the report of his subcommittee on the measure. In addition he reproduced a number of tables compiled by the Foreign Policy Association and from the League of Nations Year Book and from reports to the League.

Saying that he "would like to call the attention of the Congress to the expenditures of the United States and the other large countries for military defense purposes" he printed the following:

†In the case of France, Great Britain and Italy expenditures for military aviation are charged to an independent Air Ministry, and are not shown in the accounts of the War Department expenditures. In the above figures, one-half of the total expenditure of the Air Ministry has been added to the regular War Department expenditures, the other one-half being added to naval expenditures. In this table of expenditures for foreign countries all items of expenditure on land forces are included, even those carried in appropriations for the other departments of their governments.

THE U. S. NAVY

THE U. S. MARINE CORPS

Navy Bill Passes Senate

Considerably more than a hour was spent in an unsuccessful attempt to retain the House provision limiting the number of reserve officers above the rank of lieutenant on active duty. Senator Blaine, of Wisconsin, argued at length in an effort to retain the restriction, quoting at length from a letter from a lieutenant commander of the naval reserve, whose name he refused to reveal, condemning the "fat salaries" received by reserve officers in question.

Senator Hale defended the action of the committee in eliminating the House proviso, declaring that "there is a tendency in the Regular Navy to go ahead regardless of the desires of the Reserve, and unless we have some Reserve officers with sufficient rank on duty at the Navy Department, the Regular Navy will put something over on the Reserve."

By a vote of 40 to 20, the Blain proposal was defeated.

The Senate adopted all but one of the amendments placed in the bill by the appropriations committee, striking out the proviso setting the rental and subsistence allowances for next year at the rates provided for this year. This had been placed in the measure to prevent Navy personnel from suffering a double cut in allowances, i. e., one in the Economy bill as a part of the pay cut, and the other by Presidential order, because of a decrease in the cost of living.

Inasmuch as whatever form of pay reduction is finally written into the Economy bill, there will be no cut in allowances, the provision in the Navy supply was eliminated as unnecessary. Conferees of the Senate and House, now trying to reach an agreement on the Economy bill, cannot agree upon a cut in allowances as neither house approved it.

Following the approval of the amendments written into the bill by the committee, Senator Hale, on behalf of the committee, presented a number of others, most of them legislative provisions which had not been placed in the bill, because they were subject to a point of order.

An amendment which would have extended to the Staff Corps the benefit of the legislation enacted last session for the Line of the Navy, allowing certain lieutenants to retire if they fail professionally for promotion was defeated, when Senators King and Dill raised the point of order that it was legislation in an appropriation bill.

Other amendments offered which were adopted were to: retain the Naval Academy instructors eliminated by the House; build a sidewalk at the Bremerton Navy Yard; to maintain wages in navy yards at their existing level; acquire the Hammond radio control patents; allow the expenditure of funds from ships stores without covering into the Treasury. An amendment offered by Senator Trammell to keep the Key West Naval Station in an active status went down on a point of order.

Senator Hale, bringing up the Navy bill Thursday morning, explained that the estimates had been cut about 20 per cent. "The estimates of the Navy Department were about $397,000,000," he declared, "then the budget cut them to $348,000,000. The House reduced the total to $328,000,000, and your committee, after conferring with officials of the Navy Department, took off eight millions more, leaving the bill about $318,000,000. The greater part of the reduction made in committee comes from the item "Increase of the Navy."

Senator Dill, Dem., of Washington, seconded by Senator King, who objected to practically every feature of the bill, made a vigorous attack upon the provision for lighter-than-air activities.

"Why, in peacetime these rigid airships are dangerous in any but the best of weather," Senator Dill declared. "In time of war, with an enemy to add to the difficulties, the only place for these foolish toys would be inside a camouflaged hangar. Not only that, but can the Senator from Maine tell me one thing these things are good for as a weapon in national defense?"

"No one can tell what good they are until actually tried in war," replied Senator Hale. "I personally was never very enthusiastic about the virtues of the airship as a naval weapon. It, however, is considered to be very good as a 'negative scout,' that is, it can cover vast areas of sea and discover that the enemy is not there, which information is of great value to the commander-in-chief of the fleet. Moreover, it is a new development which may have great possibilities commercially, and if the Navy does not experiment with the ships, no one else will."

Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, raised a protest against the cutting of funds for the naval training stations at Hampton Roads, Va., Great Lakes, Ill., and San Diego, Calif., to provide $20,000 for keeping the training station at Newport, R. I., open, declaring that the action would never have been taken had Senator Swanson, of Virginia, the ranking Democrat on the Naval Affairs Committee, not been absent attending the Geneva Conference.

"I am surprised," declared the Virginian, "that the Senator from Maine would desert his colleague who is now in Europe on Government business." Senator Hale denied that he was "deserting" Senator Swanson, or that any different action would have been taken had he been present.

"The cut will not interfere with the operation of the three other stations," he stated. "They will be continued as heretofore. This only allows us to keep open an essential naval station."

The continued protests of the Virginian brought on a controversy with Senator Hebert, of Rhode Island, over the relative merits of Hampton Roads and Newport, when the former declared that the committee was "robbing a real training station in order to maintain an adjunct to a fashionable watering resort."

Carrying $8,134,998 less than the total approved by the House, the Navy Appropriation Bill was reported to the Senate on Monday, June 13. As reported, the bill provides $318,218,461 for the naval service during the fiscal year 1933, which sum is $40,043,662 below the appropriations for the current year and is $23,458,989 under the budget estimates.

Practically the entire cut made by the Senate Appropriations Committee is taken from the item "Increase of the Navy," $8,000,000 being deducted from construction and machinery under this item, $1,167,333 from armor, armament and ammunition under this head, and $300,000 from the appropriation for public works.

The reduction in funds for new construction was made at the suggestion of the Navy Department, Secretary Adams and Admiral Pratt telling the committee that the nine million dollars could not be spent during the year because of the delays which have taken place.

By transferring funds from one appropriation to another for the most part, the Senate committee was able to remove practically every one of the onerous restrictions adopted by the House. The sum of $177,600 was taken from funds under the Bureau of Aeronautics for upkeep of naval air stations and bases and placed under the appropriation for flight pay. This replaces all but $94,000 of the flight pay cut made by the House, while the remaining reduction can be handled without unduly affecting naval aviation, it was said.

Six hundred and fifty thousand dollars were added to allow 15-day cruises for the naval reserve, which had been deducted from the budget estimates in the House Appropriation Committee when the cruises scheduled for this year were cancelled by order of the Navy Department.

Comdr. L. R. Rutter, USNR, representing the Naval Reserve Officers' Association, appeared before the Senate committee during the hearings and urged that the cruises be allowed. Admiral Pratt, questioned as to the advisability of holding the cruises this year, declared that the cut was made solely as an economy measure, and that they would be glad to have the cruises if the funds were put back.

To prevent a double cut in allowances, the committee inserted a provision that the rental and subsistence allowances during 1933 shall be the same as during 1932, except as provided in the Economy Bill. This would prevent the President from reducing the allowances in accordance with the Department of Labor's cost of living index.

Deciding against a Navy Department proposal for the elimination of about a hundred Marine Corps officers by means of a "plucking board," advanced as an alternative to the Marine enlisted cut provided by the House, the Senate committee reappropriated $229,101 in unexpended balances in this year's funds, making neither cut necessary.

To avoid closing down the Newport Naval Station Training Station, the committee increased the funds provided by the House for the station, $20,000. Whether this will be sufficient is doubtful, however, for during the hearings before the Senate committee, Rear Adm. Ridley McLean, Navy budget officer, declared that a minimum of $30,000 additional was necessary to keep Newport open. The additional $20,000 provided for Newport was obtained by cutting the other three naval training stations, as follows: San Diego, $6,100; Great Lakes, $7,900; Hampton Roads, $6,000.

Another increase amounted to $682,335, made necessary by the commissioning of the 1932 Naval Academy class. Provisions in the bill fixing the number of line officers, the numbers in the various staff corps, and the number of chief petty officers were eliminated, thus making unnecessary the discharge of temporary dental officers and preventing drastic stagnation of promotion in the enlisted ranks.

The committee placed a limitation of $5,000 upon funds to be used for transportation of privately owned automobiles. The House had eliminated $307,000 for this purpose provided in the budget, although specifically allowing the return of automobiles now outside the continental limits of the United States. Testimony that the Army spent only $3,000 for this purpose during the current year caused the committee to place a limitation of $5,000 upon the funds to be expended. A similar provision is contained in the Economy bill.

Limitation of total cost of modernizing the battleships New Mexico, Mississippi, and Idaho, to $27,000,000, inserted by the House, was removed by the Senate committee, and the original cost limit of $30,000,000 restored. The committee, however, did not put back the million dollar cut from next year's appropriation for modernization, made by the House. The limitation placed upon the cost of the new destroyers was increased to $4,844,000 each.

One hundred and fifty thousand dollars for fuel which will not be spent this year, because of the Scouting Force remaining on the West Coast, was reappropriated.

Restrictions inserted in the House limiting the number of reserve officers on active duty, and prohibiting the payment of active duty pay to retired officers were nullified by the Senate committee, the former being eliminated and the assignment of six retired officers (the number originally contemplated) to active duty being allowed under an amendment to the latter provision.

A proviso prohibiting retired officers holding Government positions from drawing both salaries if the total is in excess of $3,000 per year, was eliminated. The Economy bill, however, contains a somewhat similar restriction.

In addition to restoring the naval reserve cruises, the committee amended the provision preventing naval ROTC cruises during 1933, to allow ROTC students to take the cruise without receiving pay, subsistence or mileage.

The assignment of enlisted men of the Navy to the Fleet Naval Reserve with retainer pay of $25 per year, prohibited under the House bill, is allowed by a Senate committee amendment.

A drastic cut in the appropriation for travel allowances for personnel and dependents of the Navy and Marine Corps, made by the House, was allowed to stand, with, however, the limiting figures removed. This will allow transfers of funds, so as to make the reduction less stringent.

The committee also allowed $1,500 for expenses of naval personnel attending civilian technical meetings, struck out the proviso prohibiting the secret fund for collection of information by the Office of Naval Intelligence, and amended the bill so as to allow the employment of 90 enlisted men as chauffeurs apart from the appropriation limitation upon the compensation of chauffeurs.

A restriction was placed in the bill by the committee which prohibits funds specially allotted for pay and maintenance of the Marine Corps Reserve being used for any other purpose.

Another amendment adopted by the committee allows the transfer of funds from one appropriation to another, up to 12 per cent of amount of the appropriation.

"Established in obedience to an insistent demand for an official organ for members of the American Defense and those concerned with it, The Army and Navy Journal will be published in the interest of no party; it will be controlled by no clique. Its interests will be absolute. Its interests will be directed solely to the incultation of sound military ideas and to the elevation of the public service in all its departments.—From Vol. I, No. 1, of The Army and Navy Journal, published August 29, 1863.

SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1932

"There is a rank due to the United States among nations which will be withheld, if not absolutely lost, by the reputation of weakness."—GEORGE WASHINGTON.

IN THE FACE OF THE declarations of the Republican Party at Chicago, we call upon the President and the Republican Members of Congress:

1—To defeat the proposal to reduce the commissioned strength of the Army.

2—To enact the Hale bill which will start the Navy toward that parity which the convention described as a fundamental principle of the party.

There is time to do both these things, to give unquestionable proof to the people that the platform adopted is not a mess of meaningless words but a covenant to be strictly observed. We do not believe the Army will be reduced, but if it should, and if the program of construction approved by the Naval Committees be still on the calendar at the time of adjournment, the country will understand that once more it has been made the victim of the game of bunk. On the other hand, if the policies prescribed in the platform become enactments, the country will believe the party is honest and sincere, and this in spite of the denunciations of hypocrisy which followed in the wake of the revelation of the Hoover prohibition modification plank that the convention by a majority vote accepted.

IT IS NOT AT ALL SURPRISING that the conferees on the Omnibus Economy bill failed to reach an agreement on the numerous matters in dispute and were forced to return to their respective houses for new instructions. Enacting as the measure will injustices applying to both the civil and military arms of the Government, it contains dynamite that is greatly disturbing to the men who will be candidates for re-election. It should not be forgotten by Congress that the armed forces occupy a special relationship to Government, which differentiates them from civilian employees. They are under contract to serve; they must obey the orders of their duly designated superiors, they constitute our defense against invasion and the means for the preservation of law and order. It, therefore, is imperative they should be accorded treatment in accordance with conditions, and they should be so provided for that contentment will promote their efficiency. We have no expectation that the yardstick of reduction will be withheld from the services, but we do demand that unjust discrimination shall cease, and that the objections in section 201, with reference to service pay, shall be stricken out.

THERE IS NO LIKELIHOOD of the passage of legislation at this session repudiating the United States to grant independence to the Philippines. The bill to this end, overwhelmingly approved by the House of Representatives, and the bill sponsored by Senator Hawes, of Missouri, are on the Senate calendar, and there they are expected to remain until after the election. That the Republican party does not regard the question of Philippines as of any great importance is shown by the fact that no reference to the Islands was made in the platform, although Hawaii and Porto Rico were mentioned. The services naturally would like the matter settled one way or another. They are charged with the duty of defending the islands, and their plans for expansion of the defense of the Nation in time of war necessarily include them. If the American people determine to scuttle out of the Archipelago, doubtless they will plan to establish and maintain a naval base, and this naturally will require adequate protection. To create a base and arm it so weakly that it could be easily captured would be another way of re-enforcing an enemy. It is to be hoped that if Congress should direct withdrawal from the Islands, it will provide ample funds for the construction and defense of the base it will authorize.

THERE IS EVERY REASON to believe Congress will empower the President to reorganize the supply purchases of the Army and Navy, and to make other consolidations which seem to be in the interest of economy. Studies in respect of these plans are being made in both the War and Navy Departments. It is natural that neither department is in favor of combined purchases, and in this connection particularly have earnest representation been made to the President in opposition to single control of munitions production and acquisition. Reports are current the President has been convinced that present methods are more useful and economical, but in spite of them no surprise should be felt at orders directing that the two services harmonize their munitions development and acquisition. It is, of course, certain that the plan for a Public Works Administration will be adopted, and in that case transfer of work from the Quartermaster General's Department and the Civil Engineer Corps may be expected, while Engineer officers will be assigned in rotation to the new agency for service in connection with river and harbor improvements.

THE AKRON HAS JUSTIFIED the faith of Rear Admiral Moffatt, chief of the Naval Bureau of Aeronautics, and her commanding officer, Commander Rosenthal. Safely returned to Lakewood, she can look back upon a test which tried her in innumerable and severe ways, and from which she emerged with established national confidence. The value of the Zeppelin type in war has not been fully determined, but what vessels of this class, including our Akron and Los Angeles, have shown, proves that they will play a distinct part in patrol and scouting operations, and as airplane carriers. When the Akron and her sister ship are on duty with the Fleet, it will be possible to carry on manoeuvres which will offer further proof of the importance of these machines. It speaks well for the vision of the Naval committees of Congress that in the face of discouraging world war operations, the accident to the Shenandoah, and the wind damage caused to the Akron at Lakewood they authorized the construction of the dirigibles. In any program of construction after the Akron has shown her worth, we confidently predict authorization of more of her class.

Service Humor

Poor Uncle Sam

A man from Kansas was looking into the depths of the Grand Canyon. "Do you know," said the guide, "It took millions of years for this great abyss to be carved out?"

The man from Kansas was tremendously impressed. "You don't tell me," he commanded. "Why, I didn't know this was a government job."

Maybe He Speaks From Experience

Overhearing the following conversation between her young daughter and her husband, a service wife sends it along to us:

Young Daughter: "Daddy, is venison, deer?"

Daddy: "Well, if one is caught shooting it out of season, then it is deer."

Spare the Rod

"Dear teacher," wrote an indignant mother, "you must not whack my Tommy. He is a delicate child and isn't used to it. At home we never hit him except in self-defense."

In Bad, Again

Mother (reading letter from her son in the Navy): "Oh, dear! Oh, dear! Just what I expected has happened."

Dad: "What's the matter now?"

Mother: "Bill writes that they have put him in the Commissary, and he does not say what for."

—Newport Recruit.

Vacation Time

"How are you planning to spend your vacation?"

"Unless business picks up, the wife and I will probably sit by the radio and tune in on travel talks!"

It's a Boy!

The following congratulatory message on the birth of a boy is sent along to us:

"In the dawn of time they came; these hardy, vigorous, robust, solidly respectable and eminently capable pioneers; they came from the more thickly populated sections of the Eastern Country so their children might commune with nature and be nurtured at the breast of a mighty natural deity; they came that they might carve a magnificent future for themselves and their offspring leaving behind when they passed on a virile, upstanding people; that these children might grow to maturity and become a great moral example for all the peoples of the earth for all time to come. The western land welcomed them with the beating of the Cheyenne Tom-Toms, the twang of the Crow war bow, and the clang on metal of the Comanche scalp knives, together with the promise that they would survive if they passed safely the first fifty years; that they must of necessity develop the ability to climb trees at a moment's notice to avoid serving as a late lunch for the cougar and mountain lion goes without saying and need not be entered in the record. They survived as you now behold them and, having "aged in the woods," are resting on their laurels of a lifetime of effort as exemplified by the arrival of the NEW BOY. This baby will, as it develops, cause them diverse swellings of the chest and expansions of the cranium. The congratulation tendered herewith is accompanied by the sincere hope that this sturdy lad will become a prop to his parents in the sere and yellow age to come."

ASK THE JOURNAL

SEND your queries to the ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL QUESTION EDITOR and an answer will be given as soon as possible after receipt, either in this column or by mail. Questions relative to living conditions at Army posts or Navy shore stations will be answered in detail by letter.

C. H.—We are informed by Veterans Administration that under the pension laws today a man may not draw both disability compensation and pension at the same time. The Act of 1857 to which you refer has been repealed by later pension acts.

W. R. D.—The Office of the Quartermaster General informs us that the retirement age of superintendents of National Cemeteries is seventy years. You will be able to retire at seventy upon fifteen or more years of service but not before that age except for physical disability. The amount of your retired pay depends upon the facts of your service and we are unable to estimate what your retired pay would be upon the brief facts you furnish us.

G. H.—The Office of the Chief of Field Artillery informs us that the course to be given to enlisted men of the National Guard next year will be in Communications and it will be held from January 30, 1932, to June 9, 1933. Eighteen guardsmen will be selected from the various National Guard units throughout the country and the manner of selection will be left entirely to the state National Guard organizations. We are informed that the passing grades for the courses at the Field Artillery School are not made public. If you desire to attend the course next year you should apply to your Commanding Officer.

SERVICE NEWS AND GOSSIP

Would Restrict Academy Appointments—Representative Ross A. Collins on June 15 introduced bills prohibiting Congressmen from appointing their relatives to the service academies. Two bills were introduced, one for West Point and one for Annapolis, the wordings of which were identical except for the names of the academies. The one for the Navy reads as follows:

"That it shall not be lawful hereafter for a Senator, Representative, Delegate in Congress or the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico to appoint as midshipmen to the United States Naval Academy any relative by blood, marriage or adoption."

It is interesting to note that when the anti-nepotism resolution was adopted recently, Mr. Collins was found to be carrying on the government pay-roll an "A. G. Collins" at $158.33 a month.

Army Retirements—Col. Melville S. Jarvis, Inf., who reached the age of 64 years on June 15, was this week ordered retired on June 30 with the rank of brigadier general in accordance with the war time rank bill.

Col. Gideon H. Williams, Inf., was this week ordered retired on his own application after 33 years service. His retirement is effective Sept. 30, 1932.

Lt. Col. Harry H. Van Kirk, MC, also was retired on his own application after more than 32 years service. His retirement is effective Oct. 31, 1932.

Maj. Francis J. Baker, FD, was retired on his own application after more than 36 years service. His retirement is effective Oct. 31, 1932.

Col. William McK. Lambdin, FD, New York City, was this week ordered to his home to await retirement, as was Capt. Peter Hanses, QMC, of Ft. Bliss, Tex.

The following officers have been ordered to report to Army Retiring Boards at the places after their names: Col. Leartus J. Owen, MC, Washington, D. C.; Lt. Col. Thomas P. Van Natta, Jr., Cav., Washington, D. C.; Maj. Thomas DeW. Milling, AC, Fitzsimons General Hospital; Capt. James C. DeLong, Inf., Fitzsimons General Hospital; and Capt. Everett R. Stevens, QMC, Governors Island, N. Y.

Army Chaplains' Notes—A most creditable piece of work has been accomplished at Luke Field, T. H., under the direction of Ch. Frank L. Miller, where a remodeling project has resulted in a new chapel, fully equipped and splendidly furnished. All concerned are to be commended for their energy and enterprise in making provision for such a beautiful place of worship.

The Chief of Chaplains advises that every prospective camp chaplain should begin at once to formulate suitable courses of instruction for such active duty reservists as may have had little or no military experience. Obviously these courses will be based upon the extension courses now available and will make a maximum use of the Training Manual (The Chaplain, His Place and Duties). All summer courses should make substantial contribution to the reservists' credit requirements for promotion and re-appointment.

Ch. Ralph C. Delbert reports that 220 floral tributes were placed on graves in Arlington National Cemetery on Memorial Day in response to requests from relatives and interested friends. Ch. Benjamin J. Tarskey, at the request of the Chaplains' Aid Association, secured a beautiful wreath which was placed on the Chaplains' Cenotaph on Memorial Day.

Mr. Collins Ired at Senate's Stand for Army—The resentment of Representative Ross A. Collins, chairman of the Army sub-committee in the House and author of the drastic cuts proposed, at the Senate's action in restoring the bare needs of National Defense to the Army appropriation bill is clearly evident. He issued a statement, published on page 981 of the Journal last week, and obtained leave to reprint portions of his speeches in the Record and also to reprint tables compiled by the Foreign Policy Association.

He berates the Army for not taking advantage of the "machine age" without mentioning the experimentation and endless efforts made in many quarters of the service toward mechanization and motorization through utilizing the obsolete equipment which Congress does not seem disposed to replace.

He implies that the Interdepartmental Pay Board recommended a reduction in the Army, without explaining that the forced elimination features of that report were not only made necessary by the mandate of Congress to work out a plan to equalize promotion with the other services, but provided fully for replacements of officer personnel. Neither did he mention the fact that these features of the bill were emphatically disapproved by the War Department.

Mr. Collins' methods are quite interesting. He is understood to have gone to the War Department some time ago and attempted to get the officials there to drop the National Guard "overboard." Failing in this attempt, he went to the National Guard officials, it is said, and attempted to get them to "forget" the regular Army if he would take care of the Guard. Again he met with failure. Now, it is said, he is attempting to "play" the Air Corps against the rest of the Army.

Favor Nomination of Colonel Abernethy—The Senate Committee on Military Affairs yesterday voted to report out favorably the nomination of Col. Robert S. Abernethy, CAC, to be a brigadier general in October.

This leaves only the nomination of Col. Alfred T. Smith, now assistant chief of staff for G-2, to be a brigadier general, remaining unreported by the committee. Colonel Smith would not go up until Jan. 1, 1933, so the committee may hold his nomination for some time before reporting it.

The Economy Bill—Late yesterday the conferees on the Omnibus Economy Bill were finally and definitely disagreed on the divergent views of the two Houses on the pay cut and furlough plans. It now becomes necessary for the two chambers to give new instructions to their conference managers.

The conferees did agree, however, to eliminate the provisions setting up an Administration of Public Works, leaving the organization of such a body to the determination of the President under the blanket authority granted him in the bill to affect consolidations. It is generally believed likely that the President, in view of his previous attitude on the subject, will take advantage of the opportunity to set up such an administration, rotating thereto officers of the Corps of Engineers.

Agreement was reached in principle to limit the retired pay of officers employed by the Government.

A new plan had been mentioned to reconcile the economy views, and it is possible if the Senate refuses to agree to the pay cuts that this may be used to get the two houses together.

The new plan would provide for doing away with both pay cuts and furloughs and making the necessary economy by applying a five per cent arbitrary cut to all appropriation bills. This would produce a savings of about $150,000,000.

New York Exercises—The most comprehensive maneuvers ever held to test the aerial defenses of New York City centered yesterday, Friday, on Ft. Tilden, L. I., when the Sixty-second Antiaircraft Regiment of the Regular Army Coast Artillery sped across Long Island from its home station at Ft. Totten, near Bayside, to "engage" a fleet of airplanes supposedly bent on disabling the big coast defense guns as a preliminary to long-range naval bombardment of the city.

Maj. Gen. Dennis E. Nolan, commanding the Second Corps Area, accompanied by Col. William Keith Naylor, Area Chief of Staff, and other staff officers, witnessed the elaborate program of day and night firing by calibers .30 and .50 machine guns and three-inch "archies" at Ft. Tilden. Sleeve targets towed by airplanes from Mitchel Field, L. I., represented the attacking aircraft.

Headed by a police department motorcycle escort, the long motorized column of 75 vehicles, carrying complete airplane-fighting equipment, left Ft. Totten under command of Col. Arthur S. Conklin, with conditions of an actual air-raid alarm simulated as closely as practicable.

Marine Officer Reduction Made Unnecessary—A projected Navy Department plan to "pluck out" 97 officers of the Marine Corps in lieu of a cut in enlisted men turned out to be unnecessary when the Senate appropriation committee restored the funds the elimination of which made one cut or the other necessary. Faced with a further cut of 600 enlisted men because of an arbitrary reduction from the appropriation "pay of the Marine Corps," officials of the Corps determined after some study of the situation that 600 men could not be taken from the roster and the Marines still carry on their numerous missions. However, it was decided that 100 officers could be spared temporarily, and the Major General Commandant with the approval of the Department submitted the following proposed amendment for elimination of the officers: "Provided one officer above the rank of colonel, four of the rank of colonel, five of lieutenant-colonel, fifteen of major, forty of captain, and thirty-two of first lieutenant as may be recommended by a board of marine officers and approved by the Secretary of the Navy shall be transferred to the retired list with pay at the rate of 75 per centum of their active-duty pay, and vacancies created by such retirements shall not be filled before July 1, 1933."

General Fuller, Commandant of the Marine Corps, in presenting the proposal to the Senate Committee said:

"The only way that money can be saved, you might say, is to reduce the enlisted men, either in the enlisted men or the officers. The personnel of the Marine Corps has already been reduced since last year about one-eighth and our occupations have not been materially decreased, and if any reduction from this authorization is contemplated of 15,343 to about 14,000 men, it would be almost disastrous to us, to the functioning of the Marine Corps."

"So as an alternative which we do not want at all, but which we will probably have to accept, is a reduction of the number of officers in order to make up that money. We have not got money enough in the appropriation to pay the officers and the enlisted men, and it is either a question of reducing the enlisted men or reducing the officers."

By recommending reappropriation of funds which would have been turned back into the Treasury, however, the Committee made neither course necessary.

Training of the Twenty-ninth Infantry—The training year 1931-32 for the Twenty-ninth Infantry was brought to a very successful conclusion by the announcement of the "best companies" of the various classes in the training tests and inspections conducted by the regimental commander during the past year. In the rifle company competition, Company "A" for the second successive year earned the greatest number of points—5328 from a possible 6350. Company "D," with 4437 points from a possible 5300, won the machine gun and cannon company award by the very narrow margin of 38 points over the Regimental Machine Gun Company, and the 2nd Battalion Headquarters Company won a close victory from the other Headquarters companies with 2770 points from a possible 2900.

The Twenty-ninth Infantry during the past two years have operated under a scheme of training inaugurated by Col. Duncan K. Major, Jr., which has proven highly successful. The basis of this scheme of training has been competitive tests between the different classes of companies; i. e., all rifle companies in one group, the machine gun companies and cannon company in another and the headquarters companies in a third group. These tests included inspections of barracks and stables, of personnel, close order drill, extended order drill, practice marches, making camp, check of equipment, both individual and organization, field firing tests, small bore rifle matches, landscape target firing for machine guns using both direct and indirect laying, marching by compass, combat principles of all units from the squad to the company, official records to include desertions, venereal record, punishment by trial and under the 104th A. W. and reenlistments.

able Jane Addams, after the delegates had been subjected to local as well as Chicago pacifist pressure, and after years of bombardment by pacifist propaganda. It is quite true there were no differences in the committee itself with respect to the party's defense declarations. It is equally true there was no dissent on the floor of the convention to the adoption of those declarations. In other words, roughly eleven hundred representatives of every State and community in the nation deemed it politically valuable to reiterate that the Republican party has cut the Army to the lowest point "consistent with safety," that it proposes to build up the Navy in all respects to the treaty limitations, and that it will prepare against future war. These solemn avowals should be heeded by the Republicans in Congress during the pending consideration of the Army and Navy appropriation bills. Indeed, the extent to which appropriations are made will determine whether or not the party's pledges are mere empty vaporings or virile expressions of achievement.

And now the platform: For continued efforts at disarmament, of course, in spite of the fiasco at Geneva and the obvious unwillingness of other nations to make any substantial curtailments of their military and naval strength. For naval parity at sea—"we do not propose to reduce our Navy defenses below that of any other nation." For the enforcement of the National Defense and Air Corps acts—"we * * * believe that the Army of the United States has, through successive reductions, accomplished in the last twelve years, reached an irreducible minimum consistent with the self-reliance, self-respect and security of this country." Surely here are notices to Congress and the world that naval equality will be established, that no further reduction of either officers or men will be permitted in connection with the Army, and that we are to keep our strength in the air. Another important declaration is that plans shall be perfected whereby in time of war every material resource in the nation shall bear its proportionate share of the public need. I am happy to report that the convention, which really concerned itself only with one plank in the platform—that fixing the party policy with respect to prohibition—gave utterance to genuine applause when the reading of the national defense paragraph concluded.

One of the outstanding figures of the convention was Maj. Gen. James G. Harbord, U. S. A., retired, chairman of the board of the Radio Corporation of America. The New York delegation presented the distinguished soldier as its choice for second place on the ticket. General Harbord, however, with his usual honesty of character, had declared himself for prohibition repeal. He was one of the delegates who voted for the adoption of the Bingham repeal report. Because the convention, by its platform, had opened the door for prohibition reform, the political strategists of the party deemed it wise to make the ticket officially dry, and it therefore renamed Mr. Curtis as the President's running mate. However, the enthusiasm with which the presentation of General Harbord's name was received, the applause given as his achievements were recited, and the substantial support expressed, demonstrate that the General is a factor that must be reckoned with; and the time may come when in the interest of the party it will be considered desirable to request him to take high office.

OBITUARIES

The Medical Department of the Army notes with profound regret the death of that famous surgeon, teacher and writer, Dr. William Williams Keen, jr., of Philadelphia, Pa. Dr. Keen died at his home June 8, at the age of ninety-five years and his burial was held in that city on June 10.

Better known to the public as a great surgeon, he is equally well known in the Army for his outstanding record as a military surgeon. He wore the uniform with distinction in three wars; the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, and the World War.

In the Civil War he served as contract surgeon from May 8, 1862, to June 23, 1864. At the Second Battle of Bull Run he remained with the wounded and was technically taken prisoner. A week later he returned to Washington in a wagon train loaded with the wounded for whom he cared. He was again in service during the Spanish-American War as a consultant at our general hospitals in Philadelphia where many of our sick and wounded were sent. He became one of the distinguished members of the Medical Reserve Corps Dec. 23, 1909, and held his commission until he retired on his own request with the rank of major Nov. 18, 1919. While not called to active service during the World War on account of his age, Dr. Keen served without pay as a member of the National Research Council, and as a member of the Medical Section of the Committee of National Defense. During the summer of 1920 the King of the Belgians conferred upon him the decoration of "Officer of the Order of the Crown."

Thus there passes from our midst one who was loved and admired by all. The Medical Department of the Army is tending. Some of these were mailed at the last minute, showing that the writers had not given up hope of being able to attend. Telegrams were received on the day of the dinner and read thereat from George R. Martin, C. H. Martin, and Mrs. W. Robinson. Press of business prevented the attendance of the two Martins. General Martin could not leave Congress on account of important Army legislation. Mrs. Robinson could not be with the Class because the health of her little girl made it imperative for her to go to her estate in Virginia early in June. It was a hard blow to those present for they had hoped that because of the fact that Colonel Robinson had entertained them so many times at West Point in the past the members of the Class would at least be allowed to show Mrs. Robinson how much this has been appreciated.

Many of the letters received took on a humorous vein. Among these were from U. G. McAlexander, and A. I. Morlarty.

Miss Martin was asked to tell Mr. Morlarty on her return to Boston how much those at the dinner regretted his inability to be present and how much they appreciated her presence to represent him.

After dinner many went to the hop. Press of business forced W. C. Rivers and Downing to leave for New York before the dinner hour.

All voted the Reunion a success and pledged themselves to attend that in 1937 to celebrate the 50th anniversary.

Crosley; Mr. and Mrs. Carter Harrison Fitz-Hugh; Comdr. Harlow T. Kays, USN, and Mrs. Kays; Capt. Herbert E. Stevens (SC), USN, and Mrs. Stevens.

Among recent graduates of the University of Nebraska was Mildred Ida Overholser, daughter of Lt. Col. F. E. Overholser, Inf., USA, and Mrs. Overholser. She received the Bachelor of Arts degree and Certificate as Supervisor of Music.

Mrs. Paddock and Miss Mildred Paddock, wife and daughter of Lt. Comdr. Hubert Esterly Paddock, USN, who have been with Mrs. Paddock's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin A. Martin, at the Portner, Washington, D. C., for a year, sailed from New York, June 11, on the Virginia for the west coast by way of the Panama Canal. The SS Manhattan

Completing a year and eight months of actual construction work, the turbine driven steamship Manhattan will be delivered about August 1 by the New York Shipbuilding Company of Camden, N. J., to her owners the United States Lines Company, and will sail on her maiden voyage on August 10, bound from New York to Cobh, Plymouth, Havre and Hamburg.

This new aristocrat of the waves holds several distinctions, even before she casts off on her first trip: she is the largest merchant vessel ever constructed in an American shipyard; she is the world's largest and fastest cabin liner; she is the first vessel for the North Atlantic trade built for private American owners since 1897; she sets new standards of accommodation and equipment for cabin class travel; and the completed ship, designed by American naval architects, constructed by American craftsmen employing materials originating in practically every state of the Union, and decorated by American designers, is visible proof that this country is capable of producing ships equal to those of any maritime nation.

The principal dimensions and characteristics of the Manhattan are:

Length over all.....	705 feet
Length on water line....	685 feet
Length between perpendiculars	660 feet
Beam, moulded	86 feet
Depth to promenade deck	79 feet
Designed deadweight, about	12,000 tons
Loaded displacement, about	32,000 tons
Gross tonnage	30,000 tons
Passenger capacity	1,100 persons
Maximum speed	22 knots
Cruising speed	20 knots

Financial Digest

Whatever the significance, it is interesting that the market is more or less ignoring specific unfavorable news factors. Dividends on New Haven preferred and Western Union stock were omitted and the weekly car loading figures showed a decline of 73,000 cars. There was also the statement that the New York Telephone Company has lost 80,000 telephone instruments from use in New York City since January 1. None of these factors produced material effect upon the various stocks concerned and the undertone of the market remained relatively firm.

There seems to be something of a chance in trading sentiment. Instead of anticipating and watching for liquidation, the present attitude appears to be one of watching for the development of news constructive enough to develop a fair sized rally, which might conceivably run for several days.

In the past two weeks the market has had two brief rallying periods and has successfully maintained itself above the low point of the first of the month. Indications may not be definitely bullish, but at least seem to be growing more encouraging.

"I know Service Men prefer A FRESH CIGARETTE"

All branches of the service prefer Camels, the cigarettes that are never parched, never toasted, that are made fresh, then kept fresh in the Camel Humidor Pack. If you haven't smoked a fresh cigarette lately, switch to Camels, then leave them — if you can.

● Don't remove the moisture-proof wrapping from your package of Camels after you open it. The Camel Humidor Pack is protection against sweat, dust and germs. Wherever reveille is blown the Camel Humidor Pack can be depended upon to deliver fresh Camels every time
